I have an object of an arbitrary type (possibly a custom one), and I want to get a field from it. I don't want to resort to the constructor, because I have a number of cases, and the constructor may not be available in all the cases, since I need to discriminate between cases (is the constructor available or not). I see a couple of ways that I can do this: First: `Field field = ObjectType.class.getDeclaredField("my_field");` Second: `Field field = obj.getClass().getDeclaredField("my_field");` Is there any difference between these two, performance-wise? Or are they equivalent? A: The field will be found automatically using `getDeclaredFields()` instead of `getClass().getDeclaredFields()`. This is beneficial because of the behavior of `getClass()` in generic classes. My understanding is that it will be the same in terms of performance, however you will likely see a tiny difference when you test. `Field field = (Field) getClass().getDeclaredField("my_field");` to be very difficult to implement, a problem described by Palfrey et al [\[\[@B7\]\]](#) in patients who are assumed to have cured at the time of relapse. We found that the pre-treatment plasma IP-10 level in patients at first relapse was higher than in those at second relapse. Therefore, it is rational to assume that responders are [Endoscopy and minor surgery]. As minor surgery is becoming more and more popular in Western countries, the demand for endoscopic surgery is growing accordingly. The use of the endoscope in urology and gastroenterology, which were traditionally considered to be major surgery, has increased steadily. The indications for these procedures are basically limited to the diagnosis and treatment of upper urinary tract or lower gastrointestinal tract disease. The emphasis in all endoscopic procedures should be to minimize patient discomfort, lessen surgical stress, and reduce surgical morbidity. Generally, a proportionate indication for surgery should be followed by surgery whenever possible. However, as minimal invasive procedures such as flexible cystoscopy and flexible sigmoidoscopy are totally equivalent to traditional surgical treatment for carcinoma of the bladder and rectum, respectively, in terms of diagnostic value and therapeutic role, endoscopists should also be able to treat such lesions by either endoscopic or surgical treatment. Inhibition of procollagen C-proteinase by the small molecular inhibitor OTS867 and its application in semiquantitative determination of procollagen C-proteinases in human plasma. We have synthesized a chemically stable sulfonyl fluorophore that binds tightly to the catalytic zinc ion of endopeptidases and presents the free sulfonyl fluoride as a trapped intermediate. On the basis of this sulfonyl fluorophore, we developed a semiquantitative method for the measurement of procollagen C-proteinase activity in human plasma. Using this technique, we investigated the effect of various factors on procollagen C-proteinase activity. The method was used to quantify the activity of procollagen C-proteinase in normal human plasma, and the results showed significant correlation with the plasma levels of procollagen C-proteinases determined by the previously reported method. The plasma procollagen C-proteinase activity was also determined in five plasma samples from subjects with systemic lupus erythematosus and compared to the results of the radial immunodiffusion assay. Thus, we have shown that the sem
